That's ok bro but please tell me about it. I'm still doing research based on the feedback of users and when you tell me that you tried everything I suggested, I cancel all these possibilities out of my head which leads to false conclusions. I hope you know what I mean...

I'm still hoping that you can answer all the questions I asked you in my previous posts and give detailed feedback about what you did and what exactly happened.
For example: What about this?

> Boot into a working system (like a sierra or recovery installation), go to system preferences --> startvolume (unlock the lock with your password) and select Mojave as a startvolume. Then restart and you should have a boot entry for Mojave.

Regarding the UEFI Shell, you can either install it in your EFI or prepare a USB Thumb drive with the shell on it. Maybe you can translate this:
