I'm doing Hackintoshes since Tiger and I frankly don't need any history lessons 😊 I still remember very clearly that people around OC advertised the boot loader at some time as being cleaner than Clover and pointed out that there never would be any need to lower security. You can google several quotes back from that era. But please take no offense. I was merely joking.

Yes, if you make false claims, apparently you do. I'm not interested in "emotional debates", I'm interested in not being misquoted. Said quotes refer to OC's functionality and scope. SIP extends way past OC's scope and library downgrades are completely unrelated. How are we supposed to guarantee you don't need to downgrade security for unrelated use cases the tool has no influence on? This is not the first "gotcha!" from a clear lack of technical understanding across forums and I'm reasonably tired of them.
